

Ostrogoths (himself a Rugian), sent a certain Caballarius as envoy to Constantinople, having chosen him „among his most intimate and loyal friends“ (Procopius Bell.Goth. III 2,16). According to Tjäder and Lazard there is a possibility that a certain Latinus, vir honestus, witness in a document of 539, might be an Ostrogoth with a Latin name, but in my opinion the evidence is uncertain.⁹ It is quite probable that Petrus and Paulus, two Arian priests mentioned in the bilingual papyrus of 551, were Goths with Latin religious names.¹⁰

Further, there is in 514 a Gothic comes called Petia (acc. Petiam, in Cont. Havniens. I, 331): a name of Greek origin, like Pitza, Pitzia, and probably Pitione. Both Pitza and Pitzia are recent variant renderings, with -tz-, -tzi-, and the -ti- of Petia, of forms corresponding to the classical Greek spelling -θι-.¹¹ The name Pitione belongs to this group too.¹² Finally, the difficult name Pissa could be probably explained as another form of the same Greek name Pitzia, equally treated like a Gothic hypocoristic.¹³

A saio with the Alan name of Candacis is mentioned by Cassiodorus (Variae I 37, years 507-511).¹⁴ He could have been an Alan associated to the Ostrogoths or a Goth with an Alanic name; such a case would not be isolated, as there was at the end of the 5th century a Goth belonging to the Amal clan, called Gunthigis Baza, whose second name was Alanic (Jordanes Get. 51).

⁹ Tjäder P30, I, 1955, p. 56, 260-61; Lazard 2002, p. 1208. The assumption is based on the reading Icc Latinus vh, interpreted as Goth. ik ‚ego, I, Latinus v(ir) h(onestus)‘ with a unique Gothic pronoun included in the Latin text. But the two letters of [I]cc are not clear at all (see picture in Tjäder 1954), besides the fact that the name does not belong to a list of signatures beginning with Ego... The older edition (Marini 1805) read cl (= Claudius).

¹⁰ Tjäder P34; Lazard 2002, p. 1211, n. 26.

¹¹ Πίτζας; was a Goth who surrendered to Belisarius in Samnium in 536 (Procopius Bell.Goth. I, 15). Pitzia, -ae was the famous comes and general that fought against the Gepids at Sirmio on the Danube in 504-514 (Ermodius Paneg. XII; Cassiodorus Variae v29); he is also referred to as Petza nom., Pitzamum acc. in Jordanes Get. 58. All these are related to the Greek name Πύθιας, and assimilated to Gothic masculine hypocoristics ending in -a (cp. Goth. Gevica, Sibia, etc.).

¹² Pitione (abl., papyrus of about 600 AD, Marini no. 124) was a vir honestus married to Petronia. In this case the name has been strongly romanised and inflected according to the Latin pattern in -o, -onis (Pitton- < Pitzian-*). Such a high degree of Latinisation can easily be due its late date.

¹³ Πίσσαν (acc., Procopius Bell.Goth. 116) was a Commander in Perugia under king Vitiges in 537; his name could also be compared to the Lombard Pissa, in turn of obscure origin, recorded in the Historia Langobardorum Codicis Gothani (early ninth Century).

¹⁴ Amory 1997, p. 368.